Thus Ward (1906) says: Sometimes one hears sounds like the lowing of cattle, except that the pitch is higher, like the bleating of sheep, the mewing or snarling of cats, the clucking of hens, the crowing of cocks, hoarse human chuckles, and sounds for which I could find no comparisons. Olive Thome Miller says that the young herring gull has a querulous cry like a puppy in distress. I have often been struck with the resemblance of some of their notes to the rattling of blocks in the rigging of a vessel. The usual alarm cry may be represented by the syllables, kak-kakkak, or by a series of ha ha has. Herrick writes it as waw-wakwak! wak-wak! wak-wak! Strong decided...
