Excerpt from Mid-Pacific Oceanography, Vol. 4: Transequatorial Waters, January March, 1952 Measurements of surface and subsurface temperature, salinity, and inorganic phosphate as well as plankton collections were made during Smith cruise 14. The purpose of this report is to present the tabulated station data and various vertical sections, with minimum analysis of results. There are, in addition, brief descriptions of one of the smaller features of the area. The results of the plankton collections will appear in later reports. The shipboard equipment was essentially as described by Cromwell except that the hydrographic winch and work platform were raised to a safer and more workable location on the boat deck, about 6 meters above the sea surface (see frontispiece). The main-deck laboratories were also redesigned for greater convenience. The methods of collection and processing of the raw data have been described in detail (Cromwell 1951, The treatment of the observed data from Smith cruise 14 leading to their ultimate presentation as interpolated data and vertical sections differs somewhat from the previous cruises. Smith cruises 5 and 8 (Cromwell 1954) and 11 (Austin 1954) were presented using modifications of the methods proposed by Montgomery in his evaluation of a Smith cruise 2 section (Montgomery). The procedures used in the analysis of Smith cruise 14 are, in effect, an extension of Montgomery's method, embodying, in addition to the methods he employed, several further details suggested in his paper. An outline of the method of analysis will be given here; reference to the reports above (especially Montgomery 1954) should be made for detailed discussion and theoretical consideration.
